Sex discrimination is verbal or physical conduct that is directed at an individual based on their sex, and that subjects that individual to different treatment which interferes with or limits their ability to participate in or benefit from the services, activities, or privileges provided by the University, or otherwise adversely affects the individual’s employment or education.

Examples can include:
- Being denied raises, benefits, promotions, or performance evaluations on the basis of the individual’s sex.
- An individual is subjected to comments of a sexual nature by another employee and/or supervisor, and the University fails to take steps to stop the behavior.
- Denying a student access to an educational program based on the student’s sex.
- Engaging in or sanctioning continuing discriminatory conduct, unrelated to the academic discussion in a course or class, thus creating a hostile environment for individual students.

Sexual harassment is a form of sex discrimination prohibited by state and federal law and the University’s 1B.1 Nondiscrimination in Employment and Education Opportunity Policy. Sexual harassment is defined as unwelcome sexual advances, requests for sexual favors, sexually motivated physical conduct, and other verbal or physical conduct of a sexual nature.

There are two kinds of sexual harassment. Quid pro quo, “this for that”, harassment occurs when an individual in a position of power pressures another individual to agree to their sexual demands. Hostile environment harassment occurs when repeated, unwelcome behavior or comments focus on the sexuality of another individual or occurs because of the individual’s sex and unreasonably affects that individual’s educational or working environment. Unwanted sexual comments or inappropriate touching on a one-time basis may also create hostile environment harassment.

Examples can include:
- Demanding sexual favors in exchange for a promotion or a better grade.
- “Rating” another individual’s body on sex appeal.
- Leaving unwelcome, sexually explicit messages on voice mail or via text messages.
- Telling off-color jokes or making teasing comments of a sexual nature.
- Unwanted and excessive attention through phone calls, e-mails, text messages, letters, gifts, etc.
- Unwelcome, unnecessary touching, patting, rubbing, or pinching of another individual.
- Using language that is offensive and/or implies inferiority of another individual based on their sex, such as “slut,” “bitch,” “babe,” “stud,” etc.

If you’re not comfortable talking directly to the individual, you can identify a third party whom you and the other individual mutually respect and ask for their assistance in helping the two of you talk through the behavior or conduct and why you found it offensive.

You should document incidents of discrimination and harassment immediately — who, when, where, what was said or done, and the names of any witnesses. Discrimination and/or harassment complaints should be submitted to the Office of Affirmative Action to determine if the complaint falls under the 1B.1 Nondiscrimination in Employment and Education Opportunity Policy or for referral to another University office.
