Women athletes deserve support

The Minnesota State University's women's athletic program provides us with exciting athletic competition and role models of women exercising personal power toward a goal.

The women athletes need our financial support for scholarships. The state does not provide for student athletic scholarships. We give the students financial support for their education so they can use their extra time to prepare for competition.

In return they give our community entertainment and a live demonstration of some important characteristics we want our young women to emulate when reaching for their own goals.

When our community gives support to women's athletic scholarships at MSU we support a living, breathing example of women building a team, competing, striving, enduring, rejoicing in victory and renewing oneself after defeat.

The woman athlete shows young women how to play in a highly competitive world. Our community's daughters need to see women model these characteristics which will better prepare them to work effectively in partnership with men toward goals of family, work and community life.

For these reasons I hope our community will come today to make their financial contribution, walk and have some fun.
