The mission of the Department of Mass Communications is to foster the public good by advancing socially responsible mass communication through education, research and service. The department strives to prepare students for careers as ethical and responsible public communicators, competent in such fields as news, public relations and media studies. The program enables students to:

I. have knowledge of the purpose and functions of the mass media/mass communications industry. Students should be able to:
   • demonstrate an understanding of the role and effects of American media.
   • demonstrate an understanding of racial, gender, cultural, socio-economic and political-diversity issues, and their connections to media.

II. possess the skills to gather, assess and organize information and to compile that information in a clear, concise, balanced and ethical way. Students should be able to:
   • write clearly and concisely, in a style appropriate for the profession, audience and purpose served.
   • work ethically to serve the public interest through pursuit of truth and accuracy.
   • conduct and analyze research appropriate to the profession.

III. develop awareness of their roles in the mass communications discipline as ethical and responsible communicators, and apply their practical skills in professional work in the mass communications area of their choosing. Students should be able to:
   • understand and apply the principles of the First Amendment.
   • critically evaluate their own work and that of others for appropriate spelling, punctuation and grammar.
   • critically evaluate their work and that of others for accuracy and balance.

Admission to Major is granted by the department. Contact the department for application procedures.

Proficiency in English grammar, spelling, composition and keyboarding is essential for admission to the major. A diagnostic test in English usage is required to determine such proficiency. The department requires that students complete with a cumulative GPA of 3.0 or better these courses (or their equivalents): ENG 101 and MASS 110. Overall GPA will also be considered in determining admission status. Students not meeting minimum requirements may petition the faculty in writing to seek admission.

No student entering the mass communications program may take courses beyond MASS 110 unless he/she has met the stated requirements. Students seeking entry into the department’s major must present evidence of their satisfactory fulfillment of these requirements.

In preparation for undertaking a major in mass communications, students should consider taking these courses (or their equivalents): ECON 100, An Introduction to the U.S. Economy; GEOG 103, Introductory Cultural Geography; ETHN 100, American Racial Minorities; POL 371, State and Local Government; PSYC 101, Psychology; SOC 150, Social Problems; and SOC 101, Introduction to Sociology.

The department recommends that students develop a program of study that is complementary to their major in mass communications. Students concentrating in journalism are encouraged to minor in courses in liberal arts, such as art, English, literature, modern language, history, humanities, philosophy, or political science. Students concentrating in public relations are encouraged to minor in courses in business administration, art, marketing, English, psychology, sociology, or speech.

Communication Facilities. In addition to two fully equipped modern computerized classrooms, the Department of Mass Communications has access to a broad range of on-campus facilities that provide students practical experience. Students majoring in mass communications may contribute to producing a student-oriented campus newspaper, The Reporter, a campus literary magazine, and programming for KMSU-FM radio.

Counseling and Guidance. The key to the department’s selective approach to mass communications education is its counseling and guidance program. Students are encouraged to choose a department adviser. Working closely with this faculty person, students develop academic programs that relate to their needs, interests and career aspirations.
