Sociology

Sociology is the scientific study of society and culture examining patterns of human social behavior including both social structures and social dynamics. Sociologists research macro-level structures and processes that affect society such as globalization, social movements, or race, gender and social class stratification. They analyze social institutions such as family, religion, or economy. Meso-level analyses may focus on organizational functioning or voluntary associations. Sociologists also study micro-level processes such as interpersonal relationships, socialization, and the reciprocal influences of individuals and groups. Sociologists develop theory and provide research for resolving social problems, working for social justice and developing social policy.

The Sociology major includes two options. Option I: General Sociology provides a liberal arts curriculum enhanced with research skill development for students interested in a comprehensive education or preparation for graduate education. Option II: Applied Sociology prepares students for careers in a variety of applied settings. Please visit our website (http://sbs.mnsu.edu/soccorr) for more information on careers in sociology.

The Sociology program uses a portfolio model of student professional development. Students planning to major in sociology should take Soc 200: Foundations of Sociology as soon as possible to start their portfolio. The Minnesota State Mankato Sociology Mission Statement calls for a shared faculty and student responsibility for the pursuit, transmission and application of sociological knowledge. Copies of the Mission Statement and Program Goals are available on our website and from the Department Office.

Admission to Major is granted by the Department. Minimum University admission requirements are:

• a minimum of 32 earned semester credit hours.
• a minimum cumulative GPA of 2.00 (“C”)
