CAREERS IN A GROWING FIELD

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics predicts an 11% increase in demand for urban and regional planners in the next 10 years. Urban and Regional Studies prepares students for lifelong careers shaping communities in this growing field.

UNIQUE STUDY ABROAD EXPERIENCES

Students have traveled to Ghana to explore local government and planning systems, and immerse themselves in the culture. The Department of Government often hosts opportunities to travel abroad for comparative experiences.

CREATING STREET-READY PROFESSIONALS

Urban and Regional Studies prides itself on its “theory to practice” philosophy, ensuring students get hands-on professional experience before they begin their careers. Students work directly with faculty who care about their success.

Internship experiences mean students are working on projects for communities, doing the work of planners and managers, gaining professional experience before they graduate.
