See where civil rights activists, like Anne Moody, fought against the racial discrimination that barred the state's black citizens from voting, securing good jobs, eating at local lunch counters, and accessing other rights of citizenship. Before the trip, students will study the geography, history, and culture of the state. During the trip, we'll visit museums and memorials; we'll travel across rural fields; and we'll engage in discussions to gain a better understanding of how the state remembers its difficult history. The trip will include visits to Memphis, Tennessee (on the Mississippi border), the Mississippi Delta, and the state capital of Jackson.
